

Earth Gender

Is Earth female or male?
at first thought, a silly question,
(who cares? does it matter? is this important? what's the difference?)
humans genderize everything including the creator of creatures, consciousness & natural wonder systems
a question:
can it be possible the universe is female?
can it be the universe is male? The sun male? female?
are these questions somehow off track?
is it any more on track to identify protons,
entities around since the big bloom . . .
as having sexual gender?
the male and female equally embodied, so why genderize?
if the salvation of the planet's life rests with our creativity, if it rests with our re-imagining the human in the context of the story of this great surround we find us tangled up in,
than why would language be left out?
language, only capable of mirroring a minutely small portion of what our senses experience, still shapes our world view in all powerful ways.
why would Earth be he? or she?
wouldn't it be all of these? Of these and everything in between?
(who cares, does it matter? is this important? what's the difference?)
maybe a tiny tool in the process of discovering the re-invention of human.

